Directors Think County Fair Soon to be Thing of the Past

Is the Lake County fair to be disbanded or is it to be held again as usual the coming year?
The above question is to be decided at a meeting to be held in the town hall, Libertyville, on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 18, at 2:30 o'clock and is to be put to a vote of the members of the association present on that day.
There was a meeting called for Wednesday afternoon, December 4, but because of the small attendance it was decided to adjourn so as to give the membership another chance to attend and help decide Libertyville's most momentous question.
The fact that for several years the county fairs have been run at a loss and the further fact that the fair held during the past year was the biggest loss of all on account of the small attendance, lack of interest, the war and other contributing factors it made the directors come to the conclusion that unless a better response from Lake county residents and a deeper interest is shown, there will be more fairs.
A general call is being issued and members and others interested in the continuation of the yearly fair are urged to attend the meeting at Libertyville, on the 18th of December.
The directors at the meeting Wednesday were of the unanimous opinion that unless Lake county will show more interest in the annual event the board cannot go on indefinitely and suffer a loss each year.

Sol. LaPlant Receives a German Helmet

Sol. LaPlant is the owner of a German helmet which was sent to him as a souvenir by Peter Sorensen, and which arrived a few days ago.
In his letter to Mr. LaPlant, Sorensen says he picked up the helmet on "hill No. 304" on the twenty-sixth day of September, and preserved it as a souvenir for his friend. There are no holes in the helmet, nor is it battered, although there are a few marks which show that it has served to protect some head from a shower of bullets.
The helmet is at present on exhibition at Radtke's barber shop and has already been viewed by a large number of persons.

WOUNDED THREE TIMES IN BATTLE

Earl Darby, of Wilmet, Writes of His Experience at the Battle Front

HAD BEEN REPORTED DEAD

Nov. 13, 1918.
Dear Folks:—
Say, I'll bet you folks are wondering what has become of me. I have been found this morning that our mail had been held up for some reason or other. Now I shall give you an idea of what has become of me. I left the hospital about Nov. 6, of course, I was up and about the last month I was there. I was under the care of an ear specialist, from John Hopkins University named Reik. I was put in "C" class and sent on to the convalescent camp. Here I have been placed in command of a battalion founded of companies of soldiers who are working up to get back to duty.

I have fine quarters and excellent mess and a housing job so you can see I am well situated. This camp is about six miles east of Bordeaux and today we are enjoying weather which is like Wisconsin in September.

Now then, as to my condition. I got a machine gun bullet. It hit me a slanting blow, went through the external ear and just splintered the tip of my mastoid bone. The concussion broke my ear drum. The ear and bone and drum healed nicely. But the drum in healing contracted slightly, thus pulling the small bones of the middle ear slightly out of whack. I have a continual hum in that ear and can hear only a loud tone of voice through it. The doctor says that in months the drum will be straight out and my hearing will be O. K. I also got cut by a bullet on the back of the neck, but it was a slanting blow and just left a cut not over an inch long and one fourth inch deep. Then another, just cut my right leg about six inches above the knee. Some luck, don't you think so? Well it is over with, nice work and I am glad of it.

I have had only one letter since August and only one dated later than July third. My address is Convalescent Camp, Boau Desert Hospital Center, A. P. O. 705, A. E. F.
Your son, Earle M. Darby.

Would Hold Woman to Agreement

Henry Messersmith of Chicago, has filed in circuit court a bill for specific information directed against Mary Hostetter, owner of a 90-acre tract of land at Fox Lake. The suit promises to be one of the most interesting of the kind tried in a long time.
Messersmith sets up in his bill the fact that he entered into an agreement with Mrs. Hostetter for the purchase of her tract of land by which he was to give her in return for the property $10 in cash and a large flat building in Chicago. He says that when he was ready to close the deal that Mrs. Hostetter seemed to have a change of heart. Messersmith said that he had made such arrangements in Chicago that it was not convenient for him to withdraw from the transaction and he wishes to have Mrs. Hostetter stand by the arrangements.
It is stated that Messersmith planned to spend several thousand dollars in fixing up his tract of land at Fox Lake. He planned to make it one of the finest beauty spots in all Lake county and would have stopped at no expense to make this possible. In fact it is said he had taken the matter up with an architect and had all his plans drawn so that he was already to proceed when Mrs. Hostetter apparently withdrew from the agreement.

Trouble Ahead.
Mrs. Smyth—"Yes, Nora, I hate to have my husband kiss me after he comes from the barber's. I detest the odor of that brilliantine on his mustache." Maid—"Do you? I rather like it, ma'am."

Optimistic Thought.
Merit does not always receive its reward.

Christmas Red Cross Call For Members

The Christmas Roll Call campaign now in full swing has for its object the enrollment of every person in the community as a member of the Red Cross by Dec. 23.

Any who have joined the Red Cross since Sept. 1, 1918, or who have renewed their membership will be considered as 1919 membership and counted as part of the Christmas Roll Call. All other memberships expiring in 1919 prior to Sept. should be renewed at this time. To each person joining at this time a button is to be given and ten Red Cross Christmas seals inserted in a folder "Messengers of Health," which stamps the member is asked to use at Christmas time. A service flag is to be given to each household which has a Red Cross member in it. If there is more than one member a small Red Cross is given for each additional member and for each member of the family in the army and navy and Junior auxiliary. If everyone in the household is thus enrolled a 100 per cent slip is to be given. Junior memberships are not solicited in the Christmas Roll Call.

The roll call committee has been appointed and one of the number will call at your home within a few days. Please be ready to answer "Here" to this greatest of all Roll Calls. The campaign closes Dec. 23, and all memberships and the money must reach headquarters not later than Tuesday, Dec. 24. Lay aside your dollar now in order to lighten the work of this committee as much as possible.

Mrs. K. L. Darby.

Hunter Shot by Farmer on Sunday Afternoon

All Woodstock was aroused Monday afternoon over the sensational shooting Sunday afternoon of Homer Pierson, a young Woodstock man, by Morris Fleming, 70 years old, a farmer living 4 miles east of town. Fleming has been known as an eccentric old man who for a number of years has been particularly rabid on the subject of trespassing and hunting on his premises. Quite recently it is said, he shot at George White and Orlin Williams who were hunting on his place.

Late Sunday afternoon he was driving home some cattle which had gotten out of his son's farm, adjoining his own. He met Pierson and Sam Torgenson who had been out hunting. Drawing a rifle he shot at Pierson. The bullet passing through the top of the left lung grazing the collarbone and lodging in the spine.

Wm. Fleming, a son of the old man, started to drive Pierson to Woodstock, but was met by a taxicab which had been sent out for him, and Pierson was taken the rest of the way in the machine. Dr. Wm. Freeman attended him, and reports the first of the week were that Pierson was resting well, though his condition is still serious. The doctor fears that meningitis may set in, in which case the result will probably be fatal.

Fleming was arrested and taken to Woodstock Monday morning by Sheriff Charles Wandrack and Sheriff-elect Roy Stewart. He waived examination and was bound over to the grand jury on bonds of $5000.

Letter From Jos. C. Smith

The following letter from Joseph C. Smith, will set at rest all rumors in regard to the extent of his injuries. This letter was written by Pvt. Smith on the fifteenth of November and reads as follows:

Dear Mother:
Just a few lines to let you know I am getting along O. K. Was wounded Nov. 2, machine gun bullet in the shoulder. Guess it won't be long until I get up now, sure will be glad, am getting tired of the bed. Well it is all over now. Will see you before long.
With Love, Joe

Above, Not Against.

We may not be able to dissipate the forces which war against us, but we can strengthen the forces which range themselves for us. We may not be able to change the conditions in which we must live, but we can train ourselves to be more brave and patient in their endurance; to keep our spirits above them, instead of in constant irritation against them.

Still a Chance.

"I thought I was the most unpopular man in this club, but they say Pilson over there can beat me." "But, my dear fellow, he has been a member longer than you have. Don't be discouraged."—LIFE.

Sincerity Must Be Perfect.
Sincerity is impossible unless it pervades the whole being, and the pretense of it saps the very foundation of character.—Lowell.

Contrary Mineral.

Coal is a contrary critter. Instead of expanding generously, like water, in freezing weather, it contracts rapidly. The sensitive coal pile shrinks at the first touch of winter and, with the mercury at zero, when every respectable commodity is frozen stiff, the costly coal pile melts away like Simple Simon's snowball before the fire.

Peace.

Peace is not an ideal at all; it is a state attendant upon the achievement of an ideal. The ideal itself is humane conduct of an orderly and humane society. Given this, a durable peace follows naturally as a matter of course. Without this, there is no peace, but only a rule of force until liberty and justice revolt against it in search of peace.—N. M. Butler.

Mrs. M. Dressel Receives Word of Brother's Death

Mrs. Dressel of Lake Marie received word on Friday of last week that her brother Fred Semrau, who had been in France for the past five months, had succumbed to pneumonia on the fifth of November. The official telegram was received by another brother Aug. Panknin of Wilmet, and from that village it is reported that arrangements are being made to bring the body back from France as soon as possible in order that it may be laid by the side of his mother in the Antioch cemetery.

The last letter that Mrs. Dressel received from her brother was on Thanksgiving day which contained his Christmas coupon. She was much interested in the packing of his Christmas box, little dreaming as she did so that her brother was even then cold in death.

Fred Theodore Semrau the youngest son of Ophelia and August Semrau was born in Indiana, July 31, 1886. But for the past several years he has made his home in Wilmet with his brother Aug. Panknin. He was called into Uncle Sam's service Dec. 19, 1917, and was a member of the 340th Infantry, 85th Division, leaving with this division for France in July. Later he was transferred to the 139th Infantry and was presumably a member of this infantry when he died. At that time, he was well and said very busy but did not get into detail as to his duties, saying that he would explain later.

Private Semrau was very well liked by all who knew him and will be missed by a large circle of relatives and friends. He is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Dressel, of Lake Marie; Mrs. Schraeder of Chicago; and Mrs. Fritz of South Haven, Michigan; and four brothers, John Panknin, Chicago; August Panknin, Wilmet; Charles Panknin, Lake Marie; and Ferdinand Semrau, Chicago.

Here is How They Treat The Shell Shocked Soldiers

The medical department of the army is entering into one of the biggest reconstruction problems that ever has confronted it. It is the problem of reclaiming "shell shockers" by means of physical training and development.

The practice is being tried out at the new Fort Sheridan reconstruction hospital. It is under the direction of Lieut. Colonel Theodore S. Proxmire, head of the hospital, Maj. Geo. W. Woodnick, the athletic director and Charlie White, lightweight prizefighter are in charge of the exercises. Capt. F. A. Walters is in charge of the shell shock ward.

Already 40 cases have been received from France. All of these men were in some stage of temporary insanity as a result of shock. The theory on which the work is being done is that physical development first and mental development later will bring about recovery.

The first exercise the men are put through is rope skipping. Then comes handball. This is strenuous. After that comes light work in basketball and the like. Every day the amount of work is increased until finally the men will be getting the same amount of work as a boxer in training for a big match.

In some cases recovery is affected in as short a time as ten days. This has been the fact in another of cases at the new base. The men are then sent home on a furlough to rest up.

Meanwhile work is going forward at a rapid rate on the new buildings of the hospital. It is hoped that within a few days the hospital will be equipped to care for 1,500 men. The final capacity is to be 5,000.

Need for Discipline.

The price we must pay for continually proving and possessing the good is eternal vigilance. Often a sort of pig-headedness in self-assertion, in self-management, sets up its own discipline—submitting ourselves in some ways to the will of others—is good for us all, big and little, young and old. It is the best and often the only means of breaking down the willfulness that is likely to enter any one of us at any moment.—Youth's Companion.

Pine Leaf Paper.

It has been estimated that if the immense waste were eliminated, the daily output of the long-leaf pine industry would be 4,000 tons of paper, 3,000 tons of rosin, 300,000 gallons of turpentine, and 600,000 gallons of ethyl.

Losses by Poisonous Weeds.

The loss of cattle and sheep due to poisonous weeds is very great. On the United States national forested to 6,643 cattle and 16,273 sheep, besides a number of horses, goats and other animals.

Jackson's Masonic Record Lost.
General Jackson was a noted Mason of the War of 1812, and it is claimed that he received his Masonry in an army lodge. As a matter of fact, no absolute record has ever been found of when and where Andrew Jackson was made a Mason. He afterward became grand master of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee. It is believed that the records of a lodge in Tennessee which were burned years ago would show it.

Leland Merrill, James Duffy, George Panknin, Dwin Dowell motored to Kenosha Wednesday night, where Leland, James and Dwin enlisted in the National Guards for a term of three years. They will be subject for call in the United States. They returned this week for their uniforms. Frank Matern accompanied them and remained over for a visit in Kenosha.

W. W. Winchell celebrated his 90th birthday anniversary, Sunday, Nov. 24, with a reunion of the immediate members of the family. A great many of his friends called in the afternoon to extend their congratulations and best wishes. Mr. and Mrs. H. Patrick and Will Kruckman and family motored from Burlington to be present for the occasion.

Father Brasley of Bristol, Clarence Ethier and Mr. Hoffman of the Great Lakes were entertained at Walter Carey's Thanksgiving. While going to the depot at Fox River Thursday night, Mr. Ethier who was driving the car, in passing a rig drove too near the edge of the turnpike and the bank gave way ditching the car. Only his presence of mind in pulling straight into the ditch and the fact that he had been driving about ten miles an hour saved the car from completely overturning.

Vera Hegeman received a letter from Private Leland Hegeman, France, written the day following the armistice, the first to arrive in Wilmot. He is within thirty miles of the American hospital at Verdun in which Lieutenant Earle Darby has been since wounded, and is going to try and see him. Lieut. Darby was shot by a sniper in the neck but Lieut. Darby's Captain got the sniper. In fulfilling after he was shot Lieut. Darby cut his hand on the barb wire entanglements and a bad infection set in, which was really worse than the gun shot wound. Sergeant George O'Malley is also stationed with Private Hegeman and they are able to be together a great deal.

John Moran, oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Moran of this place was united in marriage to Virginia Catherine Hayes of Pierre, South Dakota, at 8:30 Thanksgiving morning by Father Mallard. A dainty wedding breakfast was served at the home of Mrs. Wallace, the bride's sister. The happy couple left that afternoon for their honeymoon and after Jan. 1st, they will be at home in Mankato, Minn. Mr. Moran's appointment to the Mankato-Mall Pierre run came as a wedding present on the eve of his marriage, from the Superintendent's Office in St. Paul. The many friends of John extend best wishes and congratulations. He has always been very highly esteemed by his acquaintances in this community and will be well remembered by students of the U. F. H. school of which he is a graduate.

Meanness Hard to Overcome.

Some men's meanness consists of their stinginess with their means. When they give up their meanness they will be willing to give up more of their means. Such men, however, are pretty hard to convert.

SUGAR SHOWED OUR BACKBONE

American Willingness to Give Up Luxury Demonstrated Nation's War Conscience.

STAND WITH THE ALLIES.

By Reducing Consumption People of the United States Averted a Famine at Home in Spite of Low Supplies.

The fact that the people of the United States were able to reduce by more than one-half million tons their July, August, September and October consumption of sugar proves conclusively that their war conscience was thoroughly awakened and that the country as a whole stood ready to follow the injunctions of the Government.

Our normal consumption of sugar in the four-month period beginning with July has been 400,000 tons per month, a total of 1,600,000 for the quarter year.

In July, when our sugar stringency began to reach its height, consumption was reduced to 200,000 tons. In August only 325,000 tons went into distribution and in September only 270,000 tons. In October the distribution fell to 230,000 tons.

If the general public had failed to observe the injunctions of the Food Administration this country would have been in the throes of a sugar famine before the end of August. Our visible supplies were so low as to bring great anxiety to those familiar with the sugar situation. They feared that it would be absolutely impossible to reduce consumption to a point where sugar would no longer be a mere luxury in the American diet.

Few accomplishments of the Food Administration will stand forth so predominantly as this reduced consumption of sugar. By it we have been able to bridge over the period of stringency until the new beet and Louisiana cane sugar crops were in sight.

Now the nation is in a position so that if we choose we may return to our normal home use of sugar, and Europe, with the release of ships to go far afield, can maintain its recent restricted rations. If, however, those nations are to increase their use of sugar very considerably it must be by our continued sharing with them through limiting our own consumption.

AMERICAN SPIRIT RELIED ON TO WIN.

In the light of succeeding events it is interesting to recall the confidence with which the United States Food Administrator viewed the gloomy outlook in July of 1917, when this country had been in the war for less than four months and the Germans were steadily sending the western front nearer and nearer to Paris.

"Even though the situation in Europe may be gloomy today," he declared in a public statement, "no American who has knowledge of the results already obtained in every direction need have any atom of fear that democracy will not defend itself in these United States."

LOYALTY IN LITTLE THINGS LAST PROOF OF PATRIOTISM

Americans without murmuring cut their sugar allowance from four pounds a month to three and then as long as need be to two pounds for loyalty's sake.

Food Will Win the World.

America earned the gratitude of allied nations during war by sharing food. America under peace may win the world's good will by saving to share.

DEMOCRACY VS. AUTOCRACY.

"There is no royal road to food conservation. We can only accomplish this by the voluntary action of our whole people, each element in proportion to its needs. It is a matter of equality of burden."

The truth of this statement, made by the United States Food Administrator soon after we entered the war, has been borne out by the history of our exports. Autocratic food control in the hands of our enemies has broken down, while democratic food sharing has maintained the health and strength of this country and of the Allies.

SHE KEPT THEM ON THE JOB

PROVED SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY

Voluntary Basis of Food Saving Showed Heart of America Beat True for Freedom.

To the voluntary service and sacrifice of the American people must be attributed the continued health, strength and morale of the Allied armies and the civil populace.

Upon this spirit of service and sacrifice will depend Europe's fate in the months to come. In the past year we have carried out an export program, the magnitude of which is almost beyond comprehension. But with the new demands that have come, with the liberation of nations freed from German oppression, our exports must be almost doubled. Instead of 11,820,000 tons, we must ship twenty million tons of food to Europe in the coming year—as much as can be pushed through our ports.

If the Allies had not been fed by America, it would have been impossible for them to maintain their defense against Germany.

Meeting this world need on a purely voluntary basis, the American people have conclusively proved that democracy is a success and that in time of need it will rise to its own defense.

If there were no other accomplishment to its credit the very fact that it has shown the strength of democracy in itself more than justified the existence of the Food Administration in the eyes of the world.

Less than four months after the United States declared war the United States Food Administrator expressed his determination to meet America's food problem on a basis of voluntary action and reiterated his confidence that awakened democracy would prove irresistible.

"Many thinking Americans," said Mr. Hoover, "and the whole world have been watching anxiously the last four months in the fear that democratic America could not organize to meet autocratic Germany. Germany has been confident that it could not be done. Contrary proof is immediately at our door, and our people have already demonstrated their ability to mobilize, organize, endure and prepare voluntarily and efficiently in many directions and upon the mere word of inspiration aside from the remarkable assemblage of our Army and finances."

The history of the Food Administration has clearly shown that the trust of those who put their faith in democracy has not been misplaced.

SAVE 16,000,000 BUSHELS OF WHEAT THAT FORMERLY WAS LOST IN THRESHING

Farmers, Urged by Food Administration, Provide Seven Extra Loaves of Bread for Every American.

By adopting cleaner threshing methods and by literally combing harvest fields to gather grain formerly wasted, threshermen and farmers of the United States this year saved 16,000,000 bushels of wheat, estimated as equivalent to about seven one-pouloaves of bread for every person in the country. This result, accompanied by corresponding savings of barley, oats, rye and other grains, is shown by reports from 33 grain states to U. S. Food Administration. Other states, although not prepared to furnish definite figures of conservation in grain fields, report greatly reduced harvest losses.

This rural food saving achievement, accomplished in scarcely six months' time, was in direct response to requests by the Food Administration, which asked farmers and threshers to reduce harvest losses from 34 per cent.—the estimated average in normal times—to the lowest possible minimum. Country grain elevators carried into grain growing communities the recommendations for accomplishing the results desired.

In numerous instances draft racks with leaky bottoms went from the fields to repair the moment and frequently had ordering machines were stopped because of waste was removed, a proportion to the number of engaged in gathering the nation crop, cases of compulsion were comparatively rare. The Food Administration freely attributes the credit for grain threshing campaign to patriotic service by farmers, men and their crews. Any grain growers of the United States many millions of dollars "as a result of the grain save."

NO ONE SUFFERED

The marvel of our voluntary saving, now that we are results, is that no one suffered any hardship and we are all better in health and better satisfied with the cause of our friendly self.

Food control in America price of breadstuffs steady, vicious speculation and preserved tranquillity.

In no other nation is there a sense of voluntary action in America—that was a abstinance from wheat.

Find more wheat, pork, it came, save sure. So Americans answered of German starvation.

Good will rules fear governed the world, sharing food America whole world kin.

Food control means shortage, kept the nation's else.

Starvation by God all the world, to America answered.

Food conservation been the triumph of the nation.

Directors Think County Fair Soon to be Thing of the Past

Is the Lake County fair to be disbanded or is it to be held again as usual the coming year?

The above question is to be decided at a meeting to be held in the town hall, Libertyville, on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 18, at 2:30 o'clock and is to be put to a vote of the members of the association present on that day.

There was a meeting called for Wednesday afternoon, December 4, but because of the small attendance it was decided to adjourn so as to give the membership another chance to attend and help decide Libertyville's most momentous question.

The fact that for several years the county fairs have been run at a loss and the further fact that the fair held during the past year was the biggest loss of all on account of the small attendance, lack of interest, the war and other contributing factors it made the directors come to the conclusion that unless a better response from Lake county residents and a deeper interest is shown, there will be more fairs.

A general call is being issued and members and others interested in the continuation of the yearly fair are urged to attend the meeting at the forthcoming meeting at Libertyville, on the 18th of December.

The directors at the meeting Wednesday were of the unanimous opinion that unless Lake county will show more interest in the annual event the board cannot go on indefinitely and suffer a loss each year.

Sol. LaPlant Receives a German Helmet

Sol. LaPlant is the owner of a German helmet which was sent to him as a souvenir by Peter Sorensen, and which arrived a few days ago.

In his letter to Mr. LaPlant, Sorensen says he picked up the helmet on "hill No. 304" on the twenty-sixth day of September, and preserved it as a souvenir for his friend. There are no holes in the helmet, nor is it battered, although there are a few marks which show that it has served to protect some head from a shower of bullets.

The helmet is at present on exhibition at Radtke's barber shop and has already been viewed by a large number of persons.

WOUNDED THREE TIMES IN BATTLE

Earl Darby, of Wilmot, Writes of His Experience at the Battle Front

HAD BEEN REPORTED DEAD

Nov. 13, 1918.

Dear Folks:—

Say, I'll bet you folks are wondering what has become of me. I have been writing and mailing letters but it was found this morning that our mail had been held up for some reason or other.

Now I shall give you an idea of what has become of me. I left the hospital about Nov. 6, of course, I was up chasing around the last month I was there. I was under the care of an ear specialist, from John Hopkins University named Reik. I was put in "C" class and sent on to the convalescent camp. Here I have been placed in command of a battalion founded of companies of soldiers who are working up to get back to duty.

I have fine quarters and excellent mess and a bossing job so you can see I am well situated. This camp is about six miles east of Bordeaux and today we are enjoying weather which is like Wisconsin in September.

Now then, as to my condition. I got a machine gun bullet. It hit me a slanting blow, went through the external ear and just splintered the tip of my mastoid bone. The concussion broke drum healed nicely. But the drum in healing contracted slightly, thus pulling the small bones of the middle ear slightly out of whack. I have a continual hum in that ear and can hear only a loud tone of voice through it.

The doctor says that in months the drum will straighten out and my hearing will be o. k. I also got cut by a bullet on the back of the neck, but it was a slanting blow and just left a cut inch deep. Then another, just cut my right leg about six inches above the knee. Some luck, don't you think so? Well it is over with, nice work and I am glad of it.

I have had only one letter since August and only one dated later than July third. My address is Convalescent Camp, Boau Desert Hospital Center, A. P. O. 705, A. E. F.

Your son, Earle M. Darby.

Would Hold Woman to Agreement

Henry Messersmith of Chicago, has filed in circuit court a bill for specific information directed against Mary Hostetter, owner of a 90-acre tract of land at Fox Lake. The suit promises to be one of the most interesting of the kind tried in a long time.

Messersmith sets up in his bill the fact that he entered into an agreement with Mrs. Hostetter for the purchase of her tract of land by which he was to give her in return for the property $10 in cash and a large flat building in Chicago. He says that when he was ready to close the deal that Mrs. Hostetter seemed to have a change of heart. Messersmith said that he had made such arrangements in Chicago that it was not convenient for him to withdraw from the transaction and he wishes to have Mrs. Hostetter stand by the arrangements.

It is stated that Messersmith planned to spend several thousand dollars in fixing up his tract of land at Fox Lake. He planned to make it one of the finest beauty spots in all Lake county and would have stopped at no expense to make this possible. In fact it is said he had taken the matter up with an architect and had all his plans drawn so that he was already to proceed when Mrs. Hostetter apparently withdrew from the agreement.

Trouble Ahead.

Mrs. Smythe—"Yes, Nora, I hate to have my husband kiss me after he comes from the barber's. I detect the odor of that brilliantine on his mustache." Maid—"Do you? I rather like it, ma'am."

Optimistic Thought.

Merit does not always receive its reward.

Christmas Red Cross Call For Members

The Christmas Roll Call campaign now in full swing has for its object the enrollment of every person in the community as a member of the Red Cross by Dec. 23.

Any who have joined the Red Cross since Sept. 1, 1918, or who have renewed their membership will be considered as 1919 membership and counted as part of the Christmas Roll Call.

All other memberships expiring in 1919 prior to Sept. should be renewed at this time. To each person joining at this time a button is to be given and ten Red Cross Christmas seals inserted in a folder "Messengers of Health," which stamps the member is asked to use at Christmas time. A service flag is to be given to each household which has a Red Cross member in it. If there is more than one member a small Red Cross is given for each additional member and for each member of the family in the army and navy and Junior auxiliary. If everyone in the household is thus enrolled a 100 per cent slip is to be given. Junior memberships are not solicited in the Christmas Roll Call.

The Roll call committee has been appointed and one of the number will call at your home within a few days. Please be ready to answer "Here" to this greatest of all Roll Calls. The campaign closes Dec. 23, and all memberships and the money must reach headquarters not later than Tuesday, Dec. 24. Lay aside your dollar now in order to lighten the work of this committee as much as possible.

Mrs. K. L. Darby.

Hunter Shot by Farmer on Sunday Afternoon

All Woodstock was aroused Monday afternoon over the sensational shooting Sunday afternoon of Homer Pierson, a young Woodstock man, by Morris Fleming, 70 years old, a farmer living 4 miles east of town. Fleming has been known as an eccentric old man who for a number of years has been particularly rabid on the subject of trespassing and hunting on his premises. Quite recently it is said, he shot at George White and Orlyn Williams who were hunting on his place.

Late Sunday afternoon he was driving home some cattle which had gotten out of his son's farm, adjoining his own. He met Pierson and Sam Torgenson who had been out hunting. Drawing a passing through the top of the left lung grazing the collarbone and lodging in the spine.

Wm. Fleming, a son of the old man, started to drive Pierson to Woodstock, but was met by a taxicab which had been sent out for him, and Pierson was taken the rest of the way in the machine. Dr. Wm. Freeman attended him, and reports the first of the week were that Pierson was resting well, though his condition is still serious. The doctor fears that meningitis may set in, in which case the result will probably be fatal.

Fleming was arrested and taken to Woodstock Monday morning by Sheriff Charles Wandrack and Sheriff-elect Roy Stewart. He waived examination and was bound over to the grand jury on bonds of $5000.

Letter From Jos. C. Smith

The following letter from Joseph C. Smith, will set at rest all rumors in regard to the extent of his injuries. This letter was written by Pvt. Smith on the fifteenth of November and reads as follows:

Dear Mother:

Just a few lines to let you know I am getting along O. K. Was wounded Nov. 2, machine gun bullet in the shoulder. Guess it won't be long until I get up now, sure will be glad, am getting tired of the bed. Well it is all over now. Will see you before long.

We may not be able to dissipate the forces which war against us, but we can strengthen the forces which range themselves for us. We may not be able to change the conditions in which we must live, but we can train ourselves to be more brave and patient in their endurance; to keep our spirits above them, instead of in constant irritation against them.

Still a Chance.

Contrary Mineral.

Coal is a contrary critter. Instead of expanding generously, like water, in freezing weather, it contracts rapidly. The sensitive coal pile shrinks at the first touch of winter and, with the mercury at zero, when every respectable commodity is frozen stiff, the costly coal pile melts away like Simple Simon's snowball before the fire.

Peace.

Peace is not an ideal at all; it is a state attendant upon the achievement of an ideal. The ideal itself is a noble conduct of an orderly and humane society. Given this, a durable peace follows naturally as a matter of course. Without this, there is no liberty and justice revolt against it in search of peace.—N. M. Butler.

Mrs. M. Dressel Receives Word of Brother's Death

Mrs. Dressel of Lake Marie received word on Friday of last week that her brother Fred Semrau, who had been in France for the past five months, had succumbed to pneumonia on the fifth of November. The official telegram was received by another brother August Panknin of Wilmot, and from that village it is reported that arrangements are being made to bring the body back from France as soon as possible in order that it may be laid by the side of his mother in the Antioch cemetery.

The last letter that Mrs. Dressel received from her brother was on Thanksgiving day which contained his Christmas coupon. She was much interested in the packing of his Christmas box, little dreaming as she did so that her brother was even then cold in death.

Fred Theodore Semrau the youngest son of Ophelia and August Semrau was born in Indiana, July 31, 1886. But for the past several years he has made his home in Wilmot with his brother August Panknin. He was called into Uncle Sam's service Dec. 19, 1917, and was a member of the 340th Infantry, 85th Division, leaving with this division for France in July. Later he was transferred to the 139 Infantry and was presumably a member of this infantry when he died. At that time, he was well and said very busy but did not go into detail as to his duties, saying that he would explain later.

Private Semrau was very well liked by all who knew him and will be missed by a large circle of relatives and friends. He is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Schraeder of Chicago; and Mrs. Fritz of South Haven, Michigan; and four brothers, John Panknin, Chicago; August Panknin, Wilmot; Charles Panknin, Lake Marie; and Ferdinand Semrau, Chicago.

Here is How They Treat The Shell Shocked Soldiers

The medical department of the army is entering into one of the biggest reconstruction problems that ever has confronted it. It is the problem of reclaiming "shell shockers" by means of physical training and development.

The practice is being tried out at the new Fort Sheridan reconstruction hospital. It is under the direction of Lieut. Colonel Theodore S. Proxmire, head of the hospital. Maj. Geo. W. Woodnick, the athletic director and Charlie White, lightweight prizefighter are in charge of the exercises. Capt. F. A. Walters is in charge of the shell shock ward.

Already 40 cases have been received from France. All of these men were in some stage of temporary insanity as a result of shock. The theory on which the work is being done is that physical development, first and mental development later will bring about recovery.

The first exercise the men are put through is rope skipping. Then comes handball. This is strenuous. After that comes light work in basketball and the like. Every day the amount of work is increased until finally the men will be getting the same amount of work as a boxer in training for a big match.

In some cases recovery is affected in as short a time as ten days. This has been the fact in another of cases at the new bane. The men are then sent home on a furlough to rest up.

Meanwhile work is going forward at a rapid rate on the new buildings of the hospital. It is hoped that within a few days the hospital will be equipped to care for 1,500 men. The final capacity is to be 5,000.

Need for Discipline.

The price we must pay for continually proving and possessing the good is eternal vigilance. Often a sort of pig-headedness in self-assertion, in self-management, sets up its ownership. That is one reason why discipline—submitting ourselves in some ways to the will of others—is good for us all, big and little, young and old. It is the best and often the only means of breaking down the willfulness that is likely to enter any one of us at any moment.—Youth's Companion.

Pine Leaf Paper.

It has been estimated that if the immense waste were eliminated, the daily output of the long-leaf pine industry would be 4,000 tons of paper, 3,000 tons of rosin, 300,000 gallons of turpentine, and 600,000 gallons of ethyl.

Losses by Poisonous Weeds.

The loss of cattle and sheep due to poisonous weeds is very great. On the United States national forest ranges alone the loss in 1916 amounted to 6,648 cattle and 10,273 sheep, besides a number of horses, goats and other animals.

BRIDE of BATTLE

A Romance of the American Army
Fighting on the Battlefields of France

By VICTOR ROUSSEAU

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

FOREWORD

Intrigue, mystery, chivalry, love, feats of bravery on the field of honor—all these elements are interwoven in this story, which has been well described as the first up-to-the-minute novel of America in the great war for humanity and world freedom. It is a gripping story of a man who "came back" and fought on the battlefields of France for the honor of the army that had discarded him. Victor Rousseau has written many excellent stories but none that excels "Bride of Battle."

CHAPTER I

Lieutenant Mark Wallace of the Seventieth New York regiment came to an abrupt standstill. He was alone in the jungle, upon the blazing hillside before Santiago, in the month of June, 1898.

Through the branches of the trees the Mauser bullets still whizzed and whistled, and the prolonged screech of shells and distant shouting indicated that the battle, which had raged all day, had not yet reached its end. But within the short radius of Wallace's vision nothing stirred, not even the palmetto boughs that rustled with the least breeze like the sound of the sea.

Wallace had only the most confused and incoherent knowledge of what was happening on that historic day. There had been an advance in the cool of the morning, if a brief respite from the oppressive heat could be called coolness in contrast. Then came the deployment along the base of the hills as the first shells began to fall, the advance in open order, in which the nicely incalculated teachings of the parade ground fell to pieces, the jumble of men, of companies, and, later, of regiments, pressing forward past the dead and stricken, the shouts, the rattle of machine guns and rifles. Batteries came galloping where they had no theoretical business to be, upsetting the junior officers' desperate attempts to preserve alignment; Red Cross men invaded the battle line to succor the wounded; commissariat mules, shaking off the lethargy which no amount of belaboring had ever overcome, ran away with supplies and strewn embalmers of beef over the hillside. In the midst of it all Wallace had rallied some men of his own troop and led them forward; he plunged into the patch of scrub-covered jungle, and found that he was alone.

In front of him was a small clearing, made by some Cuban squatter in the preceding year and abandoned after the reaping. It contained the ruin of a palm shack, and the furrows scraped by a primitive plow were only just discernible amid the rank growth that had sprung up. The lieutenant stopped and shouted, expecting to see his men come running through the trees. But none appeared, and it was at this moment that the bullet that had been stamped with his name, according to the soldier's superstition, found him. He felt a smart blow on the shoulder, which knocked him backward. He stumbled, fell down, sat up again and discovered that his elbow was shattered. The arm hung helplessly at his side.

He managed to bind up the wound with his hand and teeth. There was not much pain, but a sort of physical languor, which made him reel giddily when he arose. There was burning thirst, too. It was extraordinary that a little thing like that should take the grit out of a man. A little blood was running down his sleeve, but the wound seemed trivial.

Wallace leaned against the wall of the shack and waited for his men.

He shouted once or twice more, but nobody answered him, and the battle seemed to be drifting in another direction. Wallace imagined that his troop had advanced around the patch of scrub, in which case he was not likely to establish touch with them again till nightfall. He cursed his luck and started forward, but the trees began to reel around him; he clutched at the wall of the shack, missed it, and fell.

Then he realized that he was out of the light. Yet, in spite of his intense disappointment, he knew that worse might have befallen him. He had fought through hours of the day—that was much; he was probably spared to lead his men again—and that was more. He had found and proved himself; and at twenty-one a young man, for all his self-confidence, is composed of fears and doubts as well. In spite of his soldier ancestors, Mark Wallace had not been sure that his capacity for leadership extended beyond the parade ground, and he had suffered from the young soldier's inevitable fear of fear.

So he resigned himself to his situation. He emptied his water bottle and, gripping the end of his gauze roll with his teeth, managed to bandage his wound sufficiently to stop the bleeding. The languor, however, was increasing. Sometimes he would doze for a few moments, awaking with a start, to wonder where he was, and what had happened. The air was very still. The shouts had long since died away, the rifle firing was a distant crackling; the tremulous staccato tapping of the machine guns was like the roll of drums far away.

Wallace must have slept for a prolonged period, for when next he became conscious he started up to see, to his intense astonishment, a pretty little girl of three or four years, standing in front of him and looking at him. He rubbed his eyes, expecting her to disappear. But she was still there, and just as he was beginning to piece together a Spanish phrase she spoke to him in English.

"I want my daddy."

Wallace reached out and drew the child toward him. "Where is your daddy?" he asked. "And who are you?"

"I'm Eleanor," she answered, "and won't you please find my daddy for me?"

She pointed with a grimy little hand toward the interior of the shack, and Wallace, struggling to his feet with a great effort, made his way inside.

It was almost dark in the hut, and Wallace could only make out with difficulty the form of a man who lay, face downward, upon the ground near the wall. Presently, however, as his eyes became more accustomed to the obscurity, he saw the bullet wound in the back of the head.

He looked up at the child, who stood by, unconcerned. "Go away, Eleanor," he said gently.

The child, too young to know anything of death, went out of the hut and began to play in the shaft of sunlight that filtered through the branches of the palms. Wallace searched the dead man's pockets. He found nothing, however, except a military pass, signed by General Linnares of the Spanish forces, authorizing the bearer to pass through the lines; and, after a moment's reflection, he decided to leave it on the body.

So this man had been the child's father, and, apart from her speech, his coloring showed that he had been an American. Wallace concluded that he had been a planter, trapped in Santiago. He raised the body in his arms and tried to turn it over, but let it fall when he saw the work that the bullet had made of the face. He must not let the little girl carry away anything of such memory as that.

He groped his way outside and beckoned to her. "What is your other name, Eleanor?" he asked.

The little girl only looked at him; it was evident that she did not understand the meaning of his question.

"Did your daddy live in Santiago?"

"My daddy has gone away. I want him," said the child, beginning to whimper.

Wallace tried her once more. "Where is your mamma?" he asked.

But she said nothing, and he sat down, propping himself against the shack. He drew the little girl down beside him.

"Now listen to me, Eleanor," he said. "Your daddy has gone away. He will be gone for a long time. You must be good and patient, and soon somebody will come to take care of you. Do you understand?"

The child's lip quivered, but she did not cry. She fixed her large gray eyes upon him.

"Who are you?" she asked, with the directness of childhood.

"My name is Mark."

"I like you, Mark. I will go with you till my daddy comes back."

"All right. Then sit down here beside me and play," muttered Wallace, wondering rather grimly what there was for her to play with.

But the grubby little fingers were soon busy in the sandy soil. Wallace watched the child, wondering who she was, and how it had happened that the father had been forced to take her into the jungle, into the midst of the contending armies. Her clothing was almost in rags, and she must have been drenched by the rains of the preceding night. It had certainly been a desperate and a difficult adventure for the dead man.

The light began to fade. Wallace, half delirious now from pain and thirst, struggled to preserve his consciousness for the sake of the little girl. Sometimes he would emerge from a semi-stupor and look round for her anxiously; but he always found her, no great distance away, building sand castles out of the soft soil and chattering to herself as happily as if she had already forgotten her sorrow.

When he awoke himself finally, it was to see the flash of a torch in his eyes. Faces which he recognized were looking into his own. There was Crawford, the senior lieutenant, who had graduated from West Point the year before, and Captain Kellerman; there was his own negro servant, Johnson, with a look of alarm on his ebony face; and near by were two men from the ambulance, carrying an empty stretcher.

Wallace moaned for water and the sense of the liquid in his throat, warm though it was, brought back consciousness with a rush.

"Well, we've got you," said Crawford cheerfully. "How are you feeling, old man?"

"Fine. Have we got Santiago?"

"Well, not exactly, but nearly. We've carried all the trenches, and we're waiting to get our big guns up. Arm hurrying you."

"No," said Wallace, stifling a groan.

"Say, Crawford, I suppose I was delirious, but I thought there was a kid here."

As he spoke he caught sight of Major Howard emerging from the shack, with the little girl in his arms, fast asleep. The major came up to him.

"How are you feeling, Wallace?" he asked. "Good! I didn't know you were a family man, though, till I saw this kid sleeping in your arms."

"You've been inside?" inquired the lieutenant, looking toward the shack.

The major's face grew very serious. He nodded.

"Her father," said Wallace.

"Come, get in with you!" answered Major Howard, curtly, indicating the ambulance. Mark, supported by the orderlies, who had placed the stretcher upon the ground, crawled in and lay down. He stretched out his arm toward the child. It was an unconscious action, but Major Howard noted it and, detaching the small arms from about his neck, he placed the little girl in the stretcher. The little head drooped upon the lieutenant's arm. As the ambulance men picked up the stretcher, two soldiers came out of the hut, carrying something in a blanket. They carried it to the center of the clearing and set it down beside a hole which had already been dug.

"He carried a pass signed by Linnares," said Wallace to the major.

Major Howard's eyes contracted into narrow slits. He nodded. "I have it," he answered.

"I wonder who he was?" said Wallace.

"We'll decide what to do with the kid after we get her back to camp," said the major curtly. It seemed to Wallace that he was unwilling to speculate upon the identity of the dead man.

"Lie still, and don't muddle your brains with thinking, my boy," he added. "We'll have you at the base hospital in next to no time."

"How many men have we lost?"

"Can't tell you. Quite a few, I'm afraid. Soames is gone. Crawford and Murray and I found ourselves bunched together at the top of the hill, leading a mixed company of Texas Rangers and Pennsylvania Dutch. We'll get them sorted out and sent home with labels as soon as we can. Move on, boys!"

The jolting stretcher proceeded out of the scrub and down the hill. Here, in the open, everything was almost as silent as in the bush, after the day's battle. Under the light of the rising moon could be seen parties of men moving over the hillside, stragglers seeking their regiments, or fatigue parties detailed upon the necessary night work that follows a day of death. The moon shone down on huddled forms clustered for the most part in little clusters, where shells or machine-gun fire had caught them.

It seemed an infinitely long journey, and every movement of the stretcher was almost unbearable. Wallace shut his lips tight. He looked at the child beside him. She moved in her sleep, feeling for his neck with the little grimy hands. Her cheek snuggled into the hollow of his arm. The lieutenant was curiously touched by this unconscious confidence.

He issued from his ordeal of pain at last, when the bearers halted in front of the line of tents that served for a field hospital. Stretchers by the dozen were piled about the ground, and more were arriving constantly. Wounded men, guided by the sound, came limping in on the last lap of their painful journeys. Others, who had arrived but had not yet been attended to, sat or lay in front of the tents. Orderlies were scurrying to and fro. Major Howard caught one of the regimental surgeons, who looked Mark over quickly and then picked the child out of the stretcher.

"Hello! Who's this?" he asked.

"Friend of his," said the major, indicating Mark.

"She doesn't look like a Cuban young lady," said the doctor, as he cut away the sleeve of the tunic.

"Her father's dead. Hit by a shell on his way from Santiago. I think he was an American," said Mark.

"Give her to me. I never had one," said the doctor, suddenly injecting a hypodermic into Mark's arm.

"Not after that," said Mark, wincing. "Besides, I'm thinking of adopting her myself."

And he wondered what had made him say that when the thought had hardly reached his own consciousness.

"See here, young man! Let me look at that arm of yours before you talk that way. Hum! You'll be running round in a couple of weeks, as well as ever."

"Thank heaven for that!" ejaculated Mark fervently. "Then I'll be in at the death."

"I doubt it. I won't pass you for duty for six months to come," said the doctor, grinning. Then, seeing Mark's dejected look, he added, more seriously:

"You may thank the modern high-power bullet that you are going to keep your arm, my boy. It's drilled a nice little pencil-hole clean through the joint, instead of shattering it, and that's got to be filled in with new growth. Even I can't grow bones in a week. I wish I could. Ten years ago your arm would have had to come off. There's nothing more I can do for you, my son," he added, as he smeared some sticky stuff over the wound and began adjusting a bandage, "except to see you up and put you in the hospital to-night, and send you down to the base in the morning."

"The devil you will! I guess I'm well enough to stay on the job as I am."

"Here, I haven't any more time to waste on you!" said the doctor. "Pounce will make you a sling and you'll go into that tent and stay there, or I'll cashier you. You won't be feeling so spry tomorrow morning. Get out!"

He strode away, leaving Mark looking into the grinning black face of Johnson.

After the sling had been adjusted he discovered that the sense of well-being, due to the hypodermic, was already beginning to leave him. His servant helped him into the tent and Major Howard brought in the little girl, who at once coiled herself up to sleep at Wallace's side.

Lieutenant Wallace makes some plans for the future of the child that had come into his possession so unexpectedly, but he is stunned by revelations that are made to him by his commanding officer, Major Howard. Read about this in the next installment.

Truly King of Birds.

"Our national bird, the bald eagle, wild in its native haunts, is so large, so majestic, and flies with an evidence of so enormous strength, that one is impressed with the thought that here is the king of birds," writes T. Gilbert Pearson of the Audubon society. "On one occasion while eating my lunch in the shade of a little bush on a Southern prairie, I saw one carry off a lamb."

Iron in Ukraine.

Within the boundaries of Ukraine are found the principal available deposits of iron ore in Russia. The development of the iron ore deposits of the Krivoy Rog district has been mainly responsible for the rapid growth of the Russian iron and steel industry, which now depends to an extent of about 70 per cent on the iron ore in the southern part of the country.

MARIE ROSE IS RESCUED AT LAST

After Years of Waiting a Voice

Safety.

Little Girl Even Learned Language of Hated Invader, but Mother Never Lost Hope of Deliverance.

Paris.—Back in 1914, when there was no war, nor whispers of it, in a certain sunny village in France, lived Marie Rose, nine years old. Beside Marie Rose, there were her father, mother and brother, and a happy family it was, indeed.

Then, on one dark day in August, war came, and its smoke of horror and misery and death seeped into Marie Rose's village. The St. Mihiel salient was formed, and there was Marie Rose quite hemmed in.

The Germans took her brother away with hundreds of other young men, on a fine morning, and Marie Rose bade him farewell. She has never seen him since. Marie Rose's father worked on his little farm, and her mother kept the house in the village and cooked for the German officers, who took the family's bedrooms with polite suavity.

Marie Studied German.

Of course, there were no schools; so Marie Rose studied German, which the bored young officers volunteered to teach her. She was told that the German language was very pretty and that before many years all the world would speak German.

In 1916 Marie Rose's father died. As Marie Rose grew older, her mother frequently told her of the great day that was coming when the Germans would be driven back and the village would again be a part of their beloved France. A German lieutenant, who overheard, laughed scornfully.

"There will be no more French army to come," he said, gayly; "all will be Germans, and of Germany."

Marie Rose ran to her mother and repeated what the German officer had said. "Don't you believe it," said Marie's mother. "They will come."

During the early morning of September 18, 1918, Marie Rose heard the distant booming of cannon to the west. As the morning grew to noon, the sound of the cannonading came nearer and Germans hurriedly packed their belongings and left without even a word for Marie Rose or her mother.

Heavy shells soon were bursting above the spire of the cathedral in the square of the village. Marie Rose's mother cried with joy as she dragged Marie Rose after her into the cellar, where they would be safe from the bursting shells.

Came a Gruff Voice.

Toward evening the village became still; there was no sound of cannonading. Then came a pounding on the door of the cellar where Marie Rose and her mother hid, and a voice cried a command, not in German, not in French.

The door was thrown open and there stood a tall soldier clad in khaki, a flat metal helmet on his head, and a long-bayoneted rifle was in his hand.

He spoke again:

"Say, ladies, don't you think you'd like to come on outside and sniff a little of the old ozone? The Heines are gone over the hills, hell bent for election. They're never coming back to this man's town, no sir!"

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attend the making of this great medicine for woman's use.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used annually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

Mr. Jenner's Christmas

by Clarissa Markie

Set in his library for many hours

HIRAM JENNER frowned darkly as he rode home behind the glass windows of his luxurious limousine. No matter which way he turned his unhappy old eyes he saw evidences of the happy Christmas season; and he had quite determined to ignore Christmas after his only child, Eve, had flouted her father's objections to her marrying a poor young inventor and eloped with George Lane, the afore-said inventor.

Although Eve had pleaded for forgiveness from her stern parent, Hiram Jenner merely refused to listen to her; he turned a deaf ear to the pleas of her friends in her behalf; returned her letters unopened and in every way possible enacted the role of a hard-hearted and pig-headed father whose daughter had disappointed him.

And the worst of it all was, said Eve's friends, who clung loyally to her, the only objectionable thing about George Lane was that he was an inventor—and that was decidedly an advantage, for sometimes—in fact, quite often—inventors made a lot of money. If that was what was worrying Papa Jenner! And why should it worry him, they argued, when the Jenner fortune was enough to launch three or four inventors on the sea of success? George Lane was not in Eve's social set, but he was a fine fellow—well educated, well bred and mighty good looking—and they loved each other to distraction.

Hiram Jenner was turning these things over in his tired mind for the hundredth time in the past year. He nourished a bitter resentment and jealousy. That his motherless daughter should have chosen a strange young man—in preference to him! That was the sore point—one of them. The other sore point was that he believed young Lane wanted to marry money so that he could finance his idiotic inventions. Well, he wouldn't get any of the Jenner fortune!

A tire on the limousine blew out at this moment and shattered the train of Mr. Jenner's thoughts.

"I'm afraid we can't get home, sir," reported the chauffeur a moment later. "Shall I call a taxicab, sir?"

"No—I'll take a car home; it's only a few blocks and one is coming now."

So Hiram Jenner left his motor and swung onto the platform of a north-bound Madison avenue car that would leave him within a block of his home.

There was just one seat left and that was in the forward end by the front window of the car. So Mr. Jenner sat down, fumbled for a nickel, and then sat gloomily watching the broad blue-clothed back of the motorman on the platform outside.

There was something familiar about that well-shaped head, covered with a crop of thick, fair hair; and the way the shoulders were squared reminded him very strongly of George Lane the night he had ventured to ask Mr. Jenner for his daughter's hand and heart.

"The fellow is on my mind," growled Mr. Jenner to himself, still staring at the fair head beneath the neat cap of the motorman.

Suddenly the man turned his head and Hiram Jenner felt a distinct shock of surprise when he discovered the classic profile of his son-in-law.

"Oho!"

So they had fallen upon evil times and the man had given up his foolish inventions and had gone to trolleying! Times must be hard indeed with them. And Eve, how could she stand privation?

Hiram Jenner was worried. He felt a vague sickness as the car became crowded with people laden with Christmas packages. No matter which way he turned he was confronted by Christmas—Christmas—and presents—and happy smiles—and the laughter of children. He remembered how he and Eve used to go Christmas shopping together and—

Was Eve going shopping this Christmas? Had she any money? Was she suffering while her father rolled in luxury—while her father's servants perhaps fared better than Eve herself?

And George Lane—why, the fellow must be made of good stuff after all, for he had gone to work at a menial job rather than beg from his rich father-in-law. Some men would have used Eve as an excuse to wring money from the old man—Eve—well, Eve might be suffering for the very necessities of life this instant!

His sunny-haired, blue-eyed, happy Eve!

Was she happy now? Hiram Jenner groped blindly from the car and went home. He sat in his library for many hours while his servants whispered together below stairs.

"He's feeling bad because of poor Miss Eve," sighed the good housekeeper. "He'd oughter; hold skinflint!" put in the butler in a disgusted tone.

"There's your bell, Mrs. Dorey," reminded the housemaid from her warm corner by the fire.

Mrs. Dorey wiped her wet eyes and went up to the library.

Hiram Jenner was sitting before his great walnut table. The shade of the large electric lamp threw his face in shadow, but his voice sounded odd and husky.

"Tomorrow will be Christmas eve, Mrs. Dorey," he said heavily. "I would like you to prepare a large hamper of food—all cooked and ready to serve—everything that will comprise a fine Christmas dinner. Please have it ready by four o'clock. I will take it with me in the car."

"Yes, sir," cried Mrs. Dorey breathlessly, as she dipped a curtsy and disappeared.

Precisely at four o'clock the next afternoon the limousine stopped in front of the Jenner mansion and the chauffeur went up to the basement door and brought out a heavy hamper, which he with much difficulty lifted into the car beside his master.

"Where to, sir?" he asked.

Mr. Jenner named a street far up in the northwestern part of the city—a section given over to great apartment houses.

His cheeks were flushed, his eyes shone, and his hands trembled.

In three quarters of an hour they paused before a substantial-looking gray stone building of the better class.

"You are sure this is the right place?" asked Mr. Jenner, wondering at the quiet elegance of the house the address of which had been given to him by one of Eve's friends.

"Yes, sir," said the man, opening the door.

So Mr. Jenner alighted, and disdaining help from Hanson, he lifted the heavy hamper and entered the quiet vestibule. In five minutes he was gliding up in the lift and standing before the door of Apartment M, with the hamper beside him.

"There's something wrong somewhere," murmured Mr. Jenner, wiping his brow; "for else that motorman chap is living beyond his means!"

A trim maid answered the door and her eyes opened widely when she saw the handsome old gentleman in the fur-lined overcoat standing beside the Christmas hamper.

"Mrs. Lane? Yes, sir—if you will come in and be seated. She is engaged at present."

So Hiram Jenner sat down in a tiny room tastefully furnished and felt a constriction of the muscles of his throat when he recognized his own portrait hanging over the mantelpiece.

There was a light step behind him and he turned to find Eve standing there, regarding him with shining eyes.

"Oh, daddy, you have come!" she cried a little brokenly.

He nodded and held out his arms. Eve came into them like a weary bird to its nest. "I have needed you so," she murmured. "I have missed you!"

Jenner thrilled strangely. "Not when you had your husband," murmured Jenner jealously.

"Ah, but you are my dear father!" protested Eve happily; "he might try—but he could never be that, you know!"

"And you are glad to see me?" asked Hiram just for the pleasure of hearing her answer.

A little later he expressed his surprise at finding her living so comfortably.

"I saw your husband—George—driving a trolley car yesterday—and I thought you must be in need—in great want," he explained. "I couldn't bear the thought—and so I concluded that if you could forgive a hard-hearted old man I would come and spend Christmas with you—and I brought my dinner along!"

Eve laughed and cried all at once and bade the maid bring in the hamper, and then she laughed and cried over the contents.

Then George Lane came in—and Hiram was somewhat surprised to find that his son-in-law was not wearing the uniform of the trolley company; he was neatly, my expensively attired, and it took the combined efforts of the young couple to convince Hiram Jenner that the young inventor was on the road to prosperity; that his presence on the trolley car was merely an incident in the trying out of a new brake of which he was the inventor and by which he expected to make a heap of money.

"And so—I am not needed after all," smiled Hiram whimsically.

"Oh, father!" they cried in unison and he was convinced.

Then Eve smiled at George and nodded and ran out of the room and presently she returned with an odd-looking bundle of white lawn and lace wrapped in a white woolly blanket.

"This is a Christmas gift for you, daddy," cried Eve with happy tears running down her cheeks.

"For me?" gasped Hiram Jenner, putting up his eyeglasses. "What is it?"

"It's a granddaughter—another Eve!" cried George Lane quietly.

And so they placed Hiram Jenner's Christmas gift in his trembling arms and his meeting with Eve's daughter was baptized with his slow tears—but they were tears of gratitude because God had been good to a hard-hearted old man and permitted him to forgive a wrong—and to receive a greater reward than he had dared dream.

And so Hiram Jenner has another Eve to worship and he calls little Eve his Christmas baby.

Low Meat Prices vs. High Cattle Prices

If the farmer cannot get enough for his live stock, he raises less, and the packer gets less raw material.

If the consumer has to pay too much for his meat, he eats less of it, and the packer finds his market decreased.

The packer wants the producer to get enough to make live-stock raising profitable, and he wants the price of meat so low that everyone will eat it.

But all he can do, and what he would have to do in any case to stay in business, is to keep down the cost of processing the farmer's stock into meat so that the consumer pays for the meat and by-products only a little more than the farmer gets for his animals.

For example, last year Swift & Company paid for its cattle about 90 per cent of what it got for meat and by-products (such as hides, tallow, oils, etc.)

If cattle from the farm were turned miraculously into meat in the hands of retailers (without going through the expense of dressing, shipping and marketing), the farmer would get only about 1 1/2 cents per pound more for his cattle, or consumers would pay only about 2 1/4 cents per pound less for their beef!

Out of this cent or two per pound, Swift & Company pays for the operation of extensive plants, pays freight on meats, operates refrigerator cars, maintains branch houses, and in most cases, delivers to retailers all over the United States. The profit amounts to only a fraction of a cent, and a part of this profit goes to build more plants, to give better service, and to increase the company's usefulness to the country.

Faith

By PEARL B. MEYER

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I don't see how in the world we can, dear. With brother in France, and with the awful cost of everything, we simply have not got the two dollars—or even one—as much as I long to do it."

Faith looked very downcast. "I suppose," she said with a sigh, "I might have taken my vacation at home, and not spent anything at all. Then we would have had enough for a few weeks."

"No, Faith." Her mother spoke decidedly. "You owed yourself one week of complete rest. Don't think of that again."

"But isn't there something we could give up in the eating line?" persisted Faith.

"You mean something else." Her mother laughed. "Dear child, no; unless you want us to give up eating altogether."

"You are a very discouraging person," Faith declared. "And the worst of it is—you are right. I know as well as you we haven't the money; still I cannot bear the thought of the next loan coming along, and of us simply ignoring it."

They sat silent for awhile, each trying to work out impossible plans in their eager minds.

"Mother," cried Faith, suddenly. "I'm going to live up to my name. This whole blessed country is as full as it can stick of $2 bills. Why shouldn't a few of them float our way, to our four flights or in from the air-shaft, and land right in our yearning pocket-books? It isn't reasonable to think there are so many, many of them, and that at least one can't find its homing way to us." Noting her mother's quizzical expression, she added: "Don't you laugh at me; I'm in earnest. I'm going to begin to invite them right away, and keep it up all week." She rose from the table as she concluded.

"Oh, youth, youth," exclaimed her mother with a half-dubious, half-merry shake of her head.

Faith crushed her little sport hat down, until one eye was almost totally eclipsed. "You just wait and see," were her last words as she darted out of the door.

Her new game afforded her much amusement. She found herself seeing $2 bills here, there, and everywhere. Her eyes seemed to pierce women's handbags, and discover whole nests of them curled up together.

"Now, if that woman would only open her purse," she imagined whimsically, "out might pop a $2 bill, and dodge right into my lap, claiming me as owner."

She commenced to smile at her own nonsense. The woman at whom she had been staring glared back savagely; then peered furtively down at herself to see what might be evoking laughter from her vis-a-vis.

The glare spent its force unheeded. Faith was absorbed in her endeavor to figure out how many times $2 the electric car company engulfed a week.

"Transfers," remarked a voice just above her hat.

Faith jumped. "Two dollars!" She stopped and turned red with embarrassment. Then she dared not look up for fear someone had heard her. The conductor passed on. Faith realized that her nonsense, instead of bringing her in $2, had just cost her five cents.

Her merry mood did not forsake her at the office.

"My goodness, your vacation certainly did you good!" exclaimed her next-desk neighbor, staring inquisitively into Faith's happy countenance. "What's his name?"

"Two dollars," chirruped Faith, emphatically, as she slipped into the familiar chair.

The week flew past in a manner quite unlike the usual first week after vacation. Faith found herself cultivating a semicomical, semiserious condition of mind. She dreamed absurdities which she at the same time frankly acknowledged as such.

But although as the days passed the $2 bill failed to materialize, Faith experienced no disappointment. Her hope was too high. Such an unselfish wish, she reasoned, and so modest at that; surely the fates must smile on her sooner or later. At any rate, she told herself, the state of expectancy in which she lived made her fairly bubble with eagerness. Her work seemed easier than ever before; her fingers performed impromptu jigs on the typewriter keys; her mind was never so alert.

But Saturday came and no $2 bill had found the strength to manage the flour flights of stairs, neither had one wafted itself in at the window from the airshaft. However, shortly after noon-hour, Faith, with eyes glowing and cheeks flushed, bounded up the stairs, two steps at a time.

"Mother!" Her voice heralded her coming before she flung open the door. "I've got it—I've got it!"

Her mother counted the rest of her stitches and then looked up.

"You look as if you had a fever," she remarked. "You should not dash up the stairs like that."

Unheeding, Faith flung something into her lap.

"Look! I've got my $2, I tell you, and it is coming every week, too," she cried breathlessly. "Where do you think I found it? Just where I never thought of wishing, mother—in my pay envelope!"

Faith

By PEARL B. MEYER

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I don't see how in the world we can, dear. With brother in France, and with the awful cost of everything, we simply have not got the two dollars—or even one—as much as I long to do it."

Faith looked very downcast. "I suppose," she said with a sigh, "I might have taken my vacation at home, and not spent anything at all. Then we would have had enough for a few weeks."

"No, Faith." Her mother spoke decidedly. "You owed yourself one week of complete rest. Don't think of that again."

"But isn't there something we could give up in the eating line?" persisted Faith.

"You mean something else." Her mother laughed. "Dear child, no; unless you want us to give up eating altogether."

"You are a very discouraging person," Faith declared. "And the worst of it is—you are right. I know as well as you we haven't the money; still I cannot bear the thought of the next loan coming along, and of us simply ignoring it."

They sat silent for awhile, each trying to work out impossible plans in their eager minds.

"Mother," cried Faith, suddenly, "I'm going to live up to my name. This whole blessed country is as full as it can stick of $2 bills. Why shouldn't a few of them float our way, to our four flights or in from the air-shaft, and land right in our yearning pocket-books? It isn't reasonable to think there are so many, many of them, and that at least one can't find its homing way to us." Noting her mother's quizzical expression, she added: "Don't you laugh at me; I'm in earnest. I'm going to begin to invite them right away, and keep it up all week." She rose from the table as she concluded.

"Oh, youth, youth," exclaimed her mother with a half-dubious, half-merry shake of her head.

Faith crushed her little sport hat down, until one eye was almost totally eclipsed. "You just wait and see," were her last words as she darted out of the door.

Her new game afforded her much amusement. She found herself seeing $2 bills here, there, and everywhere. Her eyes seemed to pierce women's handbags, and discover whole nests of them curled up together.

"Now, if that woman would only open her purse," she imagined whimsically, "out might pop a $2 bill, and dodge right into my lap, claiming me as owner."

She commenced to smile at her own nonsense. The woman at whom she had been staring glared back savagely; then peered furtively down at herself to see what might be evoking laughter from her vis-à-vis.

The glare spent its force unheeded. Faith was absorbed in her endeavor to figure out how many times $2 the electric car company engulfed a week.

"Transfers," remarked a voice just above her hat.

Faith jumped. "Two dollars!" She stopped and turned red with embarrassment. Then she dared not look up for fear someone had heard her. The conductor passed on. Faith realized that her nonsense, instead of bringing her in $2, had just cost her five cents.

Her merry mood did not forsake her at the office.

"My goodness, your vacation certainly did you good!" exclaimed her next-desk neighbor, staring inquisitively into Faith's happy countenance. "What's his name?"

"Two dollars," chirruped Faith, enigmatically, as she slipped into the familiar chair.

The week flew past in a manner quite unlike the usual first week after vacation. Faith found herself cultivating a semicomatose, semiserious condition of mind. She dreamed absurdities which she at the same time frankly acknowledged as such.

But although as the days passed the $2 bill failed to materialize, Faith experienced no disappointment. Her hope was too high. Such an unselfish wish, she reasoned, and so modest at that; surely the fates must smile on her sooner or later. At any rate, she told herself, the state of expectancy in which she lived made her fairly bubble with eagerness. Her work seemed easier than ever before; her fingers performed impromptu jig on the typewriter keys; her mind was never so alert.

But Saturday came and no $2 bill had found the strength to manage the flour flights of stairs, neither had one wafted itself in at the window from the airshaft. However, shortly after noon-hour, Faith, with eyes glowing and cheeks flushed, bounded up the stairs, two steps at a time.

"Mother!" Her voice heralded her coming before she flung open the door. "I've got it—I've got it!"

Her mother counted the rest of her stitches and then looked up.

"You look as if you had a fever," she remarked. "You should not dash up the stairs like that."

Unheeding, Faith flung something into her lap.

"Look! I've got my $2, I tell you, and it is coming every week, too," she cried breathlessly. "Where do you think I found it? Just where I never thought of wishing, mother—in my pay envelope!"

Don't Bine the Furnace!

FURNACES are built to heat houses—not all outdoors.

You can't expect to be comfortable in cold weather, if your house isn't properly protected.

Every door and window may be a "heat escape."

The heat goes out and the cold comes in. They're fighting the furnace every minute of the day and night.

Protect these exposures with

Storm Windows and Storm Doors

Houses equipped with storm windows and storm doors require from one-third to one-half less coal—a fact that will instantly appeal to every thrifty householder in these days of coal shortage and high prices. The saving in one or two seasons will pay for the cost of the storm windows and storm doors.

But their greatest benefit is the insurance of your family's health and comfort this winter. House with storm windows and storm doors can be kept warm in the coldest winter weather—it can be perfectly ventilated at all times—without cold-breeding drafts.

There is no better way to save coal and still keep your family comfortable and healthy than to think that it is a paying investment.

SHOWS UP GERMAN METHODS

One Bernstorff Message to His Government Urged Special Favor Be Shown William Bayard Hale, a Hearst Correspondent.

Washington, Dec. 9.—In telling his story of German propaganda in America, A. Bruce Bielaski, chief of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice, laid before the senate committee investigating bribery and German propaganda cablegrams exchanged in 1916 by Count von Bernstorff, then ambassador here, and the Berlin foreign office.

One of Bernstorff's messages urged that special favor be shown William Bayard Hale, an American about to visit Berlin as a newspaper correspondent, because he was employed by the Hearst organs, which, the message said, had outspokenly placed themselves on the German side.

Bielaski told the committee Hale was on the Hearst pay roll for $300 a week, and also was employed at $15,000 a year by a publicity organization formed in this country by Dr. Bernard Dernburg, the German propagandist.

Mr. Bielaski told the committee that in October, 1914, Bernstorff wrote a letter addressed to Albert and Dernburg in which he said the Washington Post was offered to him for $2,000,000. This offer was made, he said, with the understanding that the Post owners would buy the paper back at the end of the war for $1,500,000.

A communication from Fuhrer to the German foreign office, dated August 2, 1916, said the Post had been friendly to Germany up to that time, but recently had shown indications of "joining the enemy." The change was attributed by Fuhrer to the Russian ambassador, and he said the policy had changed since the death of the late John R. McLean.

Suggesting on June 2, 1916, that the time was favorable "to get Hearst to send a first-rate journalist to Berlin," Bernstorff told the foreign office that the man selected was Hale, who, he said, had been a confidential agent of the embassy since the beginning of the war, and was bound as such by contract to June 23, 1918.

"Hearst," the ambassador's message said, "is not aware that Hale is our agent, but knows him only as a Germanophile journalist, who has contributed leading articles to papers."

DANIELS' STORY OF WORK ON SEA

Declares U. S. Navy Has Big Task Ahead in Policing the Seas.

DOES SEEMINGLY IMPOSSIBLE

Did Not Lose Single East-Bound Troopship During War—Armament World's Most Powerful, Secretary's Report Shows.

Washington, Dec. 10.—With a story of brilliant achievements of the American navy in the war, Secretary Daniels couples, in his annual report, an urgent recommendation for continued naval expansion to meet the demands of peace for national and international work on the sea.

Through nearly all of the 144 printed pages the secretary tells in brief phrases of the navy's part in the war, of the doings of the seemingly impossible through team work.

He spoke of the mighty accomplishment of transporting 2,000,000 men to France without the loss of an east-bound troopship through enemy action.

This reference to the future concludes the report:

"The day is not far distant when the world will witness an end of competitive building between nations of mighty weapons of war. In the peace treaty there undoubtedly will be incorporated President Wilson's proposal for a reduction of armament to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety."

"Navies will still be needed as an international police force to compel compliance with the decree of an international tribunal which will be set up to decide differences between nations. Naval vessels will have large peace tasks of survey and discovery and protection in addition to police duty of an international as well as of a national character.

"Inasmuch as the United States is the richest of the great nations and has suffered less in war than any of the allied powers, it will devolve upon this country to make a contribution to the navy to preserve the peace of the world commensurate with its wealth, its commerce, its growing and expanding merchant marine and its leadership in the council of free people.

"It is, therefore, our duty now not, indeed to enter upon any new and ambitious navy program, but to go forward steadily upon the lines of naval increase to which the country committed itself by the adoption three years ago of the first far-reaching naval program in the history of the republic.

"I have recommended to this congress the adoption of another three-year program substantially like the one authorized in 1915. But the victory of the allies and the United States should, and will, I sincerely trust, within a few years, make it no longer necessary for any nation under whip and spur to burden its taxpayers to undertake to build, in competitive construction, bigger fighting ships and more of them than any other nation can construct."

Mr. Daniels shows that the new $600,000,000 three-year building program he has proposed will provide 150 additional naval ships, ten of them dreadnaughts and six battle cruisers, and the others to be in such distribution of approved types as the department may deem best.

Taking up his story of the navy and the war, the secretary declares the service was "ready from stem to stern" when the United States entered the conflict.

Teamwork has been the navy's slogan for five years.

The striking success of the navy is ascribed to this fact by Mr. Daniels, who continues:

"Apparently there have been times when a secretary of the navy seemed to find friction and lack of co-operation among the officers around him. If that spirit ever existed in the United States navy, I can state with confidence and pride that there is now no vestige of it, and I firmly believe, from my experience, not only during the last year, but during the last five years preceding, it never will return."

Writing with pride of the record of the marine brigade in France, the secretary shows that with only 8,000 men of the corps engaged, the casualties numbered 60 officers and 1,531 men dead, 78 officers and 2,534 seriously wounded, while but 57 marines are reported officially as captured by the enemy, illustrating the desperate character of the fighting in which the brigade participated, and the fact that it was always advancing.

BAKER REVISES ESTIMATE OF $13,222,000,000.

Secretary of War Declares Veteran Troops Will Remain in France Until Treaty Is Signed.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Secretary Baker gave it as his personal opinion that none of the veteran American divisions in France will return home before peace formally is declared.

Earlier in the day at a meeting of the senate finance committee Mr. Baker said that through contract cancellations the war department expects to save approximately $7,250,000,000 of the $24,281,000,000 voted by congress for the army during the war.

The war secretary told the senate finance committee, members of the committee said, that congress will need to appropriate only about $1,100,000,000 to cover contracts made under the $8,000,000,000 authorizations provided by congress and for which no appropriations have been made.

Forty per cent of the cancellations have been divided among states, Mr. Baker said, enumerating those in Massachusetts as amounting to $231,000,000; Michigan, $143,000,000; New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Missouri, $90,000,000 each; Illinois, $55,000,000; Indiana, $44,000,000; Wisconsin and Minnesota, $11,000,000 each.

ASKED TO JOIN RED CROSS

President's Proclamation Urges Citizens Become Members—Fee Is One Dollar.

Washington, Dec. 10.—President Wilson has issued a proclamation calling on every American to join the American Red Cross during Christmas roll call week, December 16 to 23, "and thus send forth to the whole human family the Christmas greeting for which it waits and for which it stands in greatest need."

The signing of the roll and the payment of one dollar is all that is necessary to become a member of the Red Cross. As was the case last year thousands of persons will want to sign the roll many times, paying the membership fee each time. It is these generous persons that the Red Cross is anxious to restrain. The roll call is not a drive for funds. It is a campaign for members. In this connection, the slogan of the drive is to be: "One signature and one dollar."

M'ADOO'S REPORT SHOWS COST WAS $15,222,000,000.

Estimates Government Will Receive $5,000,000,000 From Income and Profits Taxes.

Washington, Dec. 6.—The financial history of America's part in the war is set forth by Secretary McAdoo in his annual report drafted before his resignation, and made public by the treasury.

The report constitutes Secretary McAdoo's final accounting of his stewardship before retiring as the nation's finance minister.

For the 15 months ending last June 30, Secretary McAdoo estimated that the actual cost of the war, with allowances for the government's ordinary expenses in ordinary times, amounted to $13,222,000,000.

The civil establishment of the government during the year spent $1,507,000,000, while the war department spent $5,084,000,000, and the navy $1,308,000,000. For support of the army alone the government paid out $4,412,000,000. The naval expenditures included the construction of new vessels, machinery, armament, equipment and improvements at navy yards. Total ordinary disbursements for the year amounted to $8,960,000,000, and ordinary receipts, excluding money received from Liberty loans, amounted to $4,147,000,000. Loans to allies during the year amounted to $4,739,000,000 additional.

Mr. McAdoo calculated that the government will receive about $5,000,000,000 before the end of the fiscal year next June 30 from income and profits taxes, $1,100,000,000 from other taxes, $190,000,000 from customs and $555,000,000 from miscellaneous sources, including $70,000,000 from increased postage, making estimated receipts from ordinary sources $8,840,000,000.

In addition, he figured roughly on a little more than $5,000,000,000 from further issues of Liberty bonds and $1,200,000,000 from war savings.

The United States' public debt last June was $12,390,000,000.

COMMANDER PERSHING'S SUPREME TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN ARMY

General Pershing's Detailed Report of Operations in France

SAYS CRISIS OF GREAT WAR CAME ON MARCH 21

Here Are Now in Europe Thirty Divisions of U. S. Troops Approximately 2,053,347 Men Operations Previous to March 21 by Training.

Washington, Dec. 5.—John J. Pershing's account of his stewardship as commander of the American expeditionary forces was given to the public Wednesday by Secretary Baker. It is in the form of a preliminary report to the secretary, covering operations up to November, after the German collapse. It closes with these words from the leader: "The great war in France, expressed his feeling for those who served under him: 'I pay the supreme tribute to our officers and soldiers of this line. When I think of their heroism, their patience under hardships, their unflinching spirit of offensive action, I am filled with emotion which I am unable to express. Their deeds are immortal and they have earned the eternal gratitude of our country.'

The report begins with General Pershing's departure for France to give the way for the army that was to smash German resistance on the western front and give vital aid to the allies in Germany to its knees in this later.

Crisis on March 21. General Pershing views the encounter before March 21 of this year, in which American troops participated as part of their training, and dismisses it briefly. On that date, however, the great German offensive was launched and a crucial situation quickly developed in the allied lines which required prompt use of the four American divisions that were at the time "equal to any demands of battle."

The crisis which this offensive developed was such that General Pershing, on March 28, placed at the disposal of Marshal Foch, who had agreed upon as commander in chief of the allied armies, all of our forces. At his request the first division was transferred from the Toul sector to a position in reserve at Chateau de Vaux.

"As German superiority in numbers required prompt action, an agreement was reached at the Amiens conference of the allied commanders and commanders and myself on May 2 by which British shipping was to transport ten American divisions to the British army area, where they were to be trained and equipped, and additional British shipping was to be provided for as many divisions as possible for use elsewhere.

Men Eager for Test.

"On April 26 the first division had gone into the line in the Montdidier salient, on the Picardy front. Tactics had been suddenly revolutionized to those of open warfare, and our men confident of the results of their training were eager for the test. On the morning of May 28 this division attacked the commanding German position in front, taking with splendid dash the town of Cantigny and all other objectives, which were organized and held steadfastly against vicious counterattacks and galling artillery fire.

"Although local, this brilliant action had an electrical effect, as it demonstrated our fighting qualities under extreme battle conditions and also that the enemy's troops were not altogether invincible."

Hold Foe at Chateau Thierry.

There followed immediately the German thrust across the Aisne river toward Paris. He continues:

"The Third division, which had just come from its preliminary training in the trenches, was hurried to the Marne. Its motorized machine-gun battalion preceded the other units and successfully held the bridgehead at the Marne, opposite Chateau Thierry."

"The Second division, in reserve near Montdidier, was sent by motor-trucks and other available transport to check the progress of the enemy toward Paris. The division attacked and retook the town and railroad station at Boursches and skillfully held its ground against the enemy's best guard divisions."

"In the battle of Belleau wood, which followed, our men proved their superiority and gained a strong tactical position, with far greater loss to the enemy than to ourselves. On July 1, before the Second was relieved, it captured the village of Vaux with splendid precision."

BLACK SEA WARSHIPS TAKEN

Ten German War Vessels at Sebastopol Seized by Allies—Citizens Attack Huns.

On Board the British Destroyer Tilly, Sebastopol, Russia, Dec. 5.—The allies' fleet of British, French, Italian and Greek war vessels has taken from the Germans ten warships, including smaller craft, in the harbor here. The Russian dreadnaught Volga is now under the British flag.

"Meanwhile our Second corps, under Maj. Gen. George W. Read, had been organized for the command of our divisions with the British, which were held back in training areas or assigned to second-line defenses. Five of the ten divisions were withdrawn from the British area in June, three to relieve divisions in Lorraine and the Vosges and two were sent to the Paris area to join the group of American divisions which stood between the city and any further advance of the enemy in that direction."

By that time the great tide of American troop movements to France was in full swing and the older divisions could be used freely. The Forty-second, in line east of Reims, faced the German assault of July 15 and "held their ground unflinchingly," on the right flank four companies of the Twenty-eighth division faced "advancing waves of German infantry," and the Third division held the Marne line, opposite Chateau Thierry, against powerful artillery and infantry attack.

Single Regiment Checks Enemy. "A single regiment of the Third wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals on this occasion," General Pershing says. "It prevented the crossing at certain points on its front while, on other flank, the Germans who had gained a footing pressed forward. Our men, firing in three directions, met the German attacks with counterattacks at critical points and succeeded in throwing two German divisions into complete confusion, capturing 600 prisoners."

Thus was the stage set for the counter-offensive which, beginning with the smashing of the enemy's Marne salient, brought overwhelming victory to the allies and the United States in the eventful months that have followed. The intimation is strong that General Pershing's advice helped Marshal Foch to reach his decision to strike.

Counter-Offensive Opens.

General Pershing continues: "The great force of the German Chateau Thierry offensive established the deep Marne salient, but the enemy was taking chances, and the vulnerability of this pocket to attack might be turned to his disadvantage."

"Seizing this opportunity to support my conviction, every division with any sort of training was made available for use in a counter-offensive. The place of honor in the thrust toward Soissons on July 18 was given to our First and Second divisions in company with chosen French divisions."

"Without the usual brief warning of a preliminary bombardment, the massed French and American artillery, firing by the map, laid down its rolling barrage at dawn while the infantry began its charge. The tactical handling of our troops under these trying conditions was excellent throughout the action."

"The enemy brought up large numbers of reserves and made a stubborn defense both with machine guns and artillery, but through five days' fighting the First division continued to advance until it had gained the heights above Soissons and captured the village of Berzy-le-Sec."

"The Second division took Beau Repaire farm and Vlerzy in a very rapid advance and reached a position in front of Tigny at the end of its second day. These two divisions captured 7,000 prisoners and over 100 pieces of artillery."

First American Army Formed.

The report describes in some detail the work of completing the reduction of the salient, mentioning the operations of the Twenty-sixth, Third, Fourth, Forty-second, Thirty-second, and Twenty-eighth divisions. With the situation on the Marne front thus relieved, General Pershing writes, he could turn to the organization of the First American army and the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, long planned as the initial purely American enterprise.

A troop concentration, aided by generous contributions of artillery and air units by the French, began, involving the movement, mostly at night, of 600,000 men.

A sector reaching from Port sur Seille, east of the Moselle, eastward through St. Mihiel to Verdun and later enlarged to carry it to the edge of the forest of Argonne was taken over, the Second Colonial French, holding the tip of the salient opposite St. Mihiel, and the French Seventeenth corps, on the heights above Verdun, being transferred to General Pershing's command.

The combined French, British, and American air forces mobilized for the battle, the report says, was the largest aviation assembly ever engaged on the western front up to that time in a single operation.

Battle of St. Mihiel.

Of the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient General Pershing says:

"After four hours' artillery preparation the seven American divisions in the front line advanced at 5 a. m. on September 12, assisted by a limited number of tanks manned partly by Americans and partly by the French."

"These divisions, accompanied by groups of wire-cutters and others armed with Bangalore torpedoes, went through the successive hands of barbed wire that protected the enemy's front line and support trenches in irresistible waves on schedule time, breaking down all defense of an enemy demoralized by the great volume of our artillery fire and our sudden approach out of the fog."

"Our First corps advanced to Thlaucourt, while our Fourth corps curved back to the southwest through Nonard. The Second Colonial French corps made the slight advance required of it on very difficult ground, and the Fifth corps took its three ridges and repulsed a counter-attack."

"A rapid march brought reserve regiments of a division of the Fifth corps into Vigneulles in the early morning, where it linked up with patrols of our Fourth corps, closing the salient and forming a new line west of Thlaucourt to Vigneulles and beyond Fresnes-en-Woevre."

16,000 Prisoners Taken.

"At a cost of only 7,000 casualties, mostly light, we had taken 16,000 prisoners and 443 guns, a great quantity of material, released the inhabitants of many villages from enemy domination and established our lines in a position to threaten Metz."

"This signal success of the American First army in its first offensive was of prime importance. The allies found they had a formidable army to aid them, and the enemy learned finally that he had one to reckon with."

The report shows for the first time officially that with this brilliantly executed coup, General Pershing's men had cleared the way for the great effort of the allies and American forces to win a conclusive victory. The American army moved at once toward its crowning achievement, the battle of the Meuse.

The general tells a dramatic story of this mighty battle in three distinct phases, beginning on the night of September 27, when Americans quickly took the places of the French on the thinly held line of this long, quiet sector. The attack opened on September 28, and the Americans drove through entanglements, across No Man's Land, to take all the enemy's first-line positions.

Battle of the Meuse.

Closing the chapter, General Pershing says:

"On November 6 a division of the First corps reached a point on the Meuse opposite Sedan; 25 miles from our lines of departure. The strategic goal which was our highest hope was gained. We had cut the enemy's main line of communications, and nothing could save his army from complete disaster."

"In all forty enemy divisions had been used against us in the Meuse-Argonne battle. Between September 26 and November 6 we took 20,050 prisoners and 408 guns on this front."

"Our divisions engaged were the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-second, Thirty-third, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-seventh, Seventy-eighth, Seventy-ninth, Eighty-first, Eighty-second, Eighty-ninth, Ninetieth and Ninety-first."

"Many of our divisions remained in line for a length of time that required nerves of steel, while others were sent in again after only a few days of rest. The First, Fifth, Twenty-sixth, Forty-second, Seventy-seventh, Eighty-first, Eighty-ninth and Ninetieth were in the line twice."

"Although some of the divisions were fighting their first battle, they soon became equal to the best."

The commander in chief does not lose sight of the divisions operating with French or British armies during this time.

He tells of the work of the Second corps, comprising the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth divisions, in the British assault on the Hindenburg line where the St. Quentin canal passes through a tunnel.

Of the total strength of the expeditionary force, General Pershing reports:

"There are in Europe altogether, including a regiment and some sanitary units with the Italian army and the organizations at Murmansk, also including these en route from the States, approximately 2,053,347 men, less our losses."

First U. S. Planes in May.

"The first airplanes received from home arrived in May, and together we have received 1,470. The first American squadron—completely equipped by American production, including airplanes, crossed the German lines on August 7, 1918."

"As to tanks, we were compelled to rely upon the French. Here, however, we were less fortunate, for the reason that the French production could barely meet the requirements of their own armies."

"It should be fully realized that the French government has always taken a most liberal attitude and has been most anxious to give us every possible assistance in meeting our deficiencies in these as well as in other respects. Our dependencies upon France for artillery, aviation and tanks was, of course, due to the fact that our industries had not been exclusively devoted to military production."

RED CROSS IN PEACE

WORK FOR THE ORGANIZATION NOW THAT WAR MAY BE CONSIDERED ENDED.

WHOLE NATION ASKED TO AID

Chairman Davison Announces That Week Preceding Christmas Will Be Given to Efforts to Extend the Order's Membership to All Citizens.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Future plans of the American Red Cross, under which the great organization built up during the war will be devoted to peace-time relief work not only in the United States but throughout the world, was outlined in a statement issued tonight by Henry P. Davison, chairman of the war council.

"The whole American people will be invited in the week preceding Christmas to enroll as members of the Red Cross. It is confidently believed there need be no further campaigns for Red Cross funds, but instead the annual roll call will constitute the foundation of the Red Cross. The people should, therefore, know as definitely as possible the plans of this their national humanitarian society."

"Wherever our soldiers and sailors may be, the Red Cross will stay with them until they are demobilized. Nothing which we may do will be left undone, either for the men in the war zone, for those returning, for those in the camps and hospitals or for their families at home to whom will continue to be devoted the ministrations of the Red Cross home service. In this latter effort 50,000 trained Red Cross workers are now engaged at 2,500 different places throughout the land."

"The problems of reconstruction, involving feeding and caring for the distressed civilian populations of Europe, are of such magnitude that necessarily they must be met very largely by the governments of our allies, with whom our own government will co-operate."

"The war program of the American Red Cross will thus steadily and rapidly merge itself into a peace program. While the plans in this direction cannot be formulated specifically, in advance of the general relief program of the allied governments, the American Red Cross is nevertheless planning to develop its permanent organization in this country upon a scale never before contemplated in time of peace. The commissions which are now conducting the activities of the American Red Cross in foreign countries, as well as the temporary war organization in this country, will as a matter of course ultimately merge their energies with those of the permanent organization of the Red Cross."

"There may be, therefore, perfect confidence that the peace activities of the Red Cross will be conducted under able and inspiring leadership. The chapters will maintain their organizations upon a scale adequate to the new demands to be made upon them. Local committees will indeed appreciate more and more the value of having in their midst strong and efficient Red Cross chapters. The divisional organizations, with honorary and permanent staffs, will be maintained—always ready for service; and national headquarters will have a large and efficient personnel to direct the activities of the organization as a whole."

"For the completion of its war work and for the institution of its peace program, the Red Cross is fortunately in a healthy financial condition. Abundant occasion for the use of large funds of money and great quantities of garments and other supplies will continue to arise, but it is believed that there will be no further need for intensive campaigns for funds. The work of supplementing governmental activities, which the Red Cross will be called upon to do in all parts of the world, will be upon a great scale, but it will call for human service rather than for large expenditures."

"What the American Red Cross needs now is not so much contributions of money, as the continued devotion and loyalty of its members. This is peculiarly true at this moment of transition from war to peace. Annual membership involves the payment of only one dollar. The moneys thus received not only defray all the administrative expenses of the organization, but leave a substantial balance, which, together with all funds subscribed directly for relief, are devoted solely to that purpose. The roll call of the nation is thus to be called at Christmas time, that through enrollment in their Red Cross the American people may send a message to our soldiers still overseas and to the peoples of the world that we are not only merely content with seeing our arms united with our allies in victory, but that our abiding purpose is that the love, the sympathy and the intelligence of all America shall be rededicated to the permanent service of mankind."

Intelligent Dog.

The family doctor was making a professional call one afternoon, when Johnny, who happened to be the patient on this occasion, suddenly gave a chuckle just as the physician had completed his examination and remarked in a half confidential whisper: "Say, just look at my doggy! I guess he knows you're a doctor, all right. He's got his tongue out."

Doing Right.

Everything on earth has its price, and sooner or later we pay for all that we have. When we complain that doing right takes so much toll of effort, sacrifice, and the loss of what we call "success," we have only to look about us to see that evil-doing is more costly still. Its demands may come in on the installment plan, but they will be all the more exorbitant because of that.
